SITUATION SUMMARY

Oroville Dam Auxiliary Spillway Incident

On 02/12/17 at 1603 hours the California State Warning Center (CSWC) received notification from the Department of Water Resources (DWR) automated line that the Oroville Dam was in failure status due to extreme scouring of the auxiliary spillway. The CSWC are made notifications according to SOP. All down stream warning points were notified.

Per the DWR Flood Operations Center and California Data Exchange Center (CDEC) as of 02/15/17 at 1000 hours:

- Current releases from Oroville Dam (100,000 cfs) are within the downstream channel capacities in the Feather River.
- Inflows are at 31,000 cfs. substantially less than the outflow releases.
- The lake elevation has dropped below 878.25 feet as result, no water is flowing over the auxiliary emergency spillway.
- The target is to drop the elevation at Lake Oroville to 851 feet by 02/18/17
- The plan to prevent further erosion utilizes trucks, helicopters, and hand crews to move large rocks and gravel to fill holes in the emergency spillway.

Activations

Key Points

Today-Thursday

- The next storm system is moving onshore across northern CA today and will have expanding precipitation along with very strong winds

Friday

- A second storm will be more widespread across the state Friday, with the greatest impacts expected from heavy rainfall and strong winds across southern CA

Saturday

- Thunderstorms will be possible across southern CA Saturday

Sunday

- Additional storm systems will occur early next week, generally across central and northern CA

Key Impacts

- Minor to moderate flooding along unregulated rivers, streams, roadways, and low-lying areas continues, and will have additional inflow today and into next week.
- Heavy snow will cause hazardous travel over Sierra passes with travel delays likely Thursday and Friday into Saturday, and again Monday through Wednesday next week.
- Winds will be strong enough to potentially create some tree damage and areas of power outages Wednesday into Thursday.
- Rockslides and mudslides possible, especially along mountain slopes and steep grades during and following the periods of additional rainfall, especially Friday in Southern CA.
- Debris flows are also possible over burn scars with periods of brief heavy rain (greater than 0.50" per hour), especially Friday into Friday night across southern CA

WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- Rain will return to Northern California by later tonight and continue into Thursday as the first in another series of storms moves into Northern California
- Light to moderate rain to Southwest California Thursday until a stronger system Friday. This may be the most significant storm of the season, especially for Santa Barbara South Coast and points south.

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

http://www.wrh.noaa.gov/sto/brief/www_bc_cal.php

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

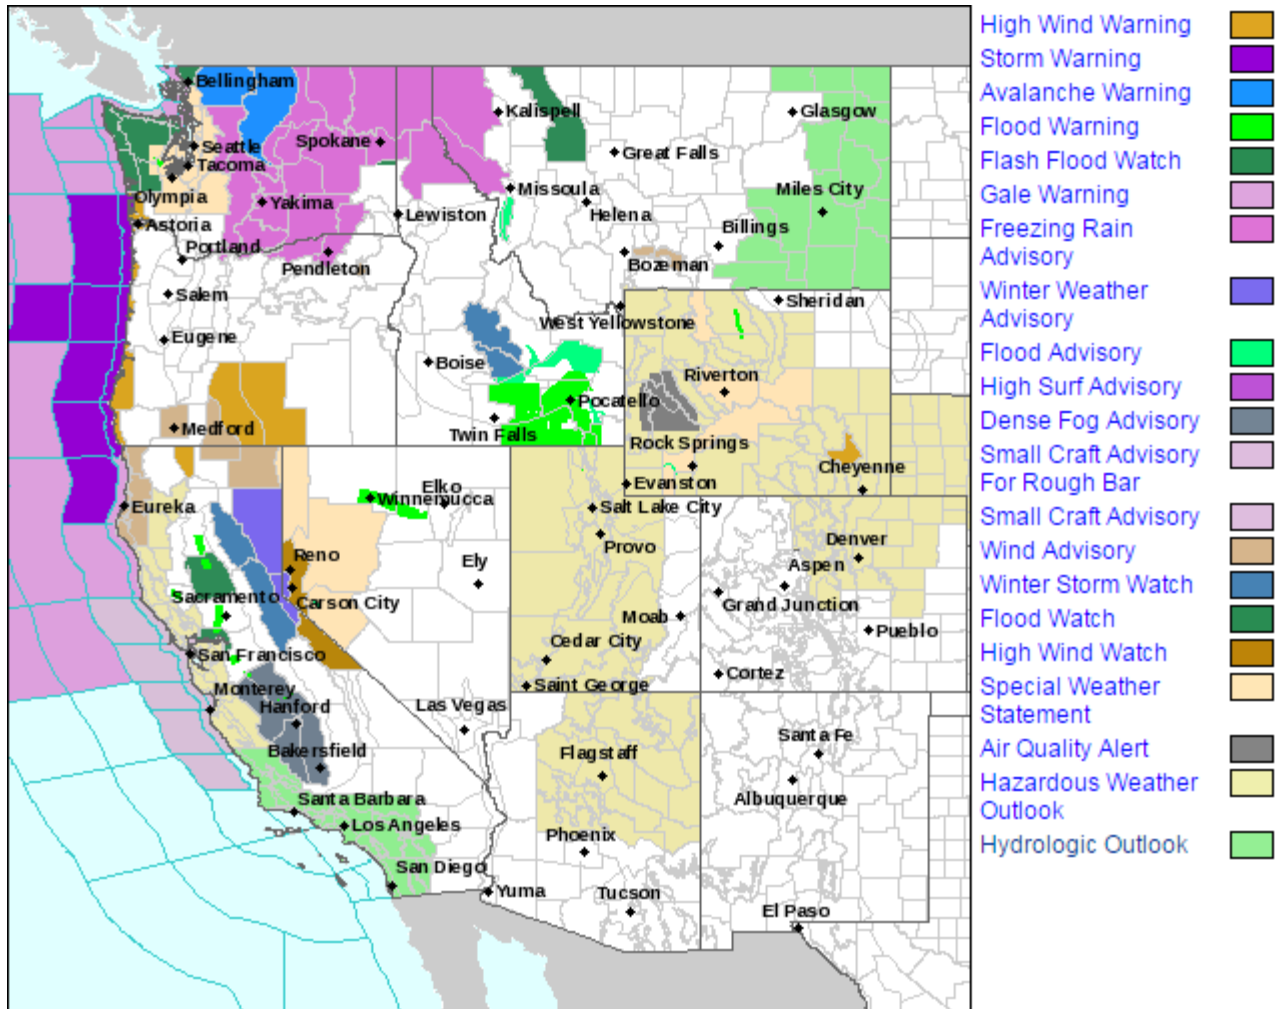

The next Pacific storm to affect Northern California has already produced a few tenths of an inch of rain in far northwest California, with some locations already over half an inch. The snow level is above 7000 ft. SE to SW winds are increasing. Many areas will see gusts of 25-35 mph, and the most wind-prone northern mountain areas will see 50-60 mph gusts, and locally higher. Moderate to heavy rain and high elevation snow will spread inland tonight as the main cold front begins to push in. Once the front passes during the day on Thursday snow levels will drop to 4000 ft in the north and 5500 ft in the south as the precipitation turns to showers and winds diminish. After a brief break Thursday night another storm system will move into Central California early Friday. Rain, with snow levels around 6000 ft will spread north across Northern California during the day on Friday. The heaviest precipitation will be from Plumas and Mendocino Counties south, with snow levels 6000-7000 ft. Showers will continue on Saturday with snow levels dropping to 4000-5500 ft. A colder system on Sunday will produce a few snow showers in the northern mountains. A fourth system similar to the current one will move in Monday and Tuesday. Colder systems are expected to drop in from the north next Wednesday into the weekend and produce scattered light precipitation with low snow levels.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A strong ridge of high pressure will bring well above normal temperatures today, with mid 50s to mid 60s across the mountains and upper 60s to low 80s in the valleys. Minimum humidity will be mainly between 12% and 25% and winds will be light today. A series of Pacific storms will bring periods of rain to the area Thursday through the end of next week. The first storm will bring showers to Central California starting Thursday morning and to Southern California starting Thursday evening. Most locations across Central California will receive between a quarter inch and an inch of rainfall, while most locations across Southern California will receive less than a quarter inch of rainfall with this first storm. A very strong storm will bring 4 to 8 inches of rainfall to most foothill and mountain locations and between 2 and 4 inches of rainfall to most coastal and valley locations Friday through Saturday morning. The snow level will be around 8,000 feet and then drop to around 6,000 feet Friday night. Scattered showers will fall across the region Saturday afternoon through Monday before another possible strong storm affects the area Tuesday into Wednesday. Periods of strong south to west winds will surface across the area especially just ahead of the two big storms. Temperatures will cool to a little above normal Thursday and then be near to a little below normal Friday through the end of next week.
